

STATE REPRESENTATIVE

TRAM NGUYEN

has overcome tough challenges her whole life – now she’s running for Congress to restore our democracy

- At just five years old, Tram came to the United States as a refugee after her family fled Vietnam’s authoritarian regime with only $100, a few suitcases, and a dream.
- After graduating from Tufts and Northeastern School of Law, Tram worked as a legal aid attorney standing up for survivors of domestic violence, veterans, immigrants, LGBTQ+, and those who couldn’t fight for themselves.
- The first Vietnamese-American to serve in the state house, Tram chairs the House Committee on Climate Action and Sustainability, working to build a sustainable future with good-paying union jobs. She led the charge to expand unemployment benefits to help people survive the pandemic.

Most importantly, Tram knows how to take the fight to MAGA Republicans. In 2018, she defeated a MAGA incumbent in a tough district by 10 points.

As a refugee, lawyer, and State Representative, Tram Nguyen has proven she will work hard to make life better for Massachusetts families. She lives in Andover with her husband and their two rescue dogs.

Tram rhymes with ‘mom.’
Nguyen sounds like ‘win.’

ABOUT THE DISTRICT

Massachusetts' Sixth District comprises the state's North Shore, some of Boston's suburbs, and parts of the Merrimack Valley. With two of the state's most liberal counties – Middlesex and Essex – the district includes the cities of Salem and Lynn, and suburbs such as Andover. Previous election results demonstrate that voters here support Democratic women, as well as candidates of color.

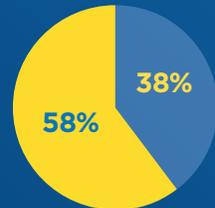

WHY TRAM WILL WIN

- Tram's lived experience as a political refugee and woman of color give her a different perspective and will resonate with the electorate. Her election will be historic – if she wins, she will be the first Asian American to represent Massachusetts in Congress.
- Tram is one of the most prolific fundraisers in the Legislature and has a proven track record of building big coalitions to win.
- With a track record of accomplishments rooted in Massachusetts, Tram can point to real victories for families across the district.
